R.

R, the seventeenth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponds with the Greek rho (P, ρ). On account of the aspirate which always accompanies the Greek letter, we find it represented by rh in some words derived from that language. The letters r and s seem to have been interchangeable to a great extent, as in arbor, arbos; honor, honos; quaeso for quæro; hesternus, from heri, etc.; r is also assimilated with l, as in the diminutive libellus from liber, in intello from inter-lego, etc. For abbreviations in which R, is used, see Table of Abbreviations.

S.

S, the eighteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, bet, corresponding to the Greek sigma (Σ, σ, ς), sometimes representing the Greek aspirate, e.g., sez = σέ, sal = σάλ, serpo = σπρω, vrep = super. It is occasionally interchanged with t (as mersare, pulsare, mertare, pultare), and r (as honor and honos). The poets of the older period often elided s before a consonant, e.g., vitā illā dignū locoque; by assimilation, s before f becomes f, as difficilis; it often represents another consonant which has been assimilated to it, as jubeo, jussi (for jubsī), cedo, cessi (for cedsī), premo, pressi (for premsī), pando, passum (for pandsum). For abbreviations in which S. is used, v. Table of Abbreviations.
